Putting Voice and Passion in Non-Fiction Writing

There are no boring subjects, only boring writers.
~ Barry Lane

Teaching non-fiction writing with voice is a challenge. Many books and seminars on non-fiction writing teach rigid formulas for success at such assignments but few address the real problem: how to help our students find their own unique voices when writing about subjects outside of themselves. This session will show you techniques for helping students grades 3-12 discover their own voices and craft them into eloquent, smart, funny, sad, audacious, papers that reach the hearts and minds of their readers.
